

St justus visit

Dear Blog

Last week we went to saint Justus church. I looked at the altar, but next to it was a Baptist pool which we don't have at our church. You go In the Baptist pool then they tip your head back into the water, then you immerse out the other side as a new person and have chosen the path of the lord.

Another difference was they didn't wear robes they were their own clothes. Also all around the church were normal windows rather than stained glass windows. They don't have stained glass because they want to attract people.

Rather than using organs they use drums and keyboard and drums because they are a traditional church. When we arrived we noticed there was not a tabernacle, they just bought bread and wine before the service and drank and ate it all. It wasn't a colourful church so they used colourful objects to brighten it up. Such as flags to wave during service and ribbons.

Also they put Christmas trees all around the church at Christmas that are decorated but the special one stands in the middle of the pool and you wright a message in the heart for people who have died. At the front were the vicar stands was the alter and behind was a white board so you can read the hymns on the board and watch videos. They also do holiday clubs for children last year. By Oscar.
